Opening Conference, 'The Hand and the Word'

This conference's bottom line issue comes down to an interdisciplinary reflection from a non-psychoanalyst's understanding of Psychoanalysis' nature as a discipline that operates beneath the sciences of mankind and those of biology.

... An evolutionary theory of the origin and evolution of language is outlined from the cut and use of the first Palaeolithic tools, considered to have a grammatical and syntactic nature. Thus is based a definition of the genus Homo.

... Freud’s theorization is situated in the universal and structural scope of myths, discussing aspects of its consequences in this communication.
